Desmond Doss grew up in Lynchburg, Virginia, and was a Seventh Day Adventist, (26) meant he was a pacifist – he didn’t believe in violence and chose not to bear arms. His beliefs and his job as a defense industry worker provided him draft exemption during the war, but he dismissed that chance to defer. Doss wanted to serve his country, so he enlisted in the Army Medical Corps as a noncombatant.

But (27) his conscientious objector status – including his refusal to handle duties on the Saturday Sabbath – boot camp wasn’t easy for him. He was threatened and harassed. Many of the other recruits threw shoes at him while he prayed, and they tried to have him (28) out of their unit. They weren’t successful, though, and Doss proved them all wrong during his service with the 307th Infantry, 77th Infantry Division.

In late April 1945, 26-year-old Doss and his battalion were called upon to help fight near Urasoe Mura, Okinawa, in a campaign that would be one of the last and biggest in the Pacific. Using cargo nets, Doss’ battalion was tasked with climbing a treacherous, 400-foot-high jagged cliff, nicknamed Hacksaw Ridge, to get to a plateau. Waiting for them were thousands of (29) Japanese soldiers entrenched in hidden caves and holes.

About a week into the fight, Doss was the only medic available to advance with the rest of the men, who were close to taking the ridge from the enemy. It was his Sabbath, but Doss joined his men anyway, just as the Japanese concentrated massive artillery and other heavy fire on them. The assault left many dead and injured soldiers in its wake. The remaining Americans were driven back down the escarpment, except for Doss. He was the only one to remain with the wounded.

Over the span of several hours, Doss treated the injured and, one by one, dragged them to the edge of the cliff, where he lowered them to safety in a rope sling. After each successful delivery, he reportedly said, “Dear God, let me get just one more man.” By nightfall, he had rescued 75 soldiers, (30) him earlier in his military career.

School tests harm science education

Making schoolchildren take tests is harming students' interest in science, as well as having a negative impact on kids' natural curiosity. This is the conclusion of a British university report into science teaching and testing in primary schools. Researchers from Durham University warned that too many schools were teaching science just so students could pass tests. There is a lot of pressure for students to get to better schools. The experts said there was very little real science teaching going on that encouraged students to find out things for themselves. Learning by doing, experimenting and seeing should be at the heart of all physics, chemistry and biology lessons. The Durham University team found the opposite; that there was little hands-on, practical work taking place in Britain's schools.

Lead researcher Professor Peter Tymms said it was important to develop new approaches to primary school science. He compared today's teaching with that of the past sixty years and found that testing was harming children's natural desire to ask questions about science: "We suspect that the current national approach to science in primary schools is not impacting on children's scientific thought and curiosity as much as is possible," he said. Professor Tymms made it clear what schools and science teachers need to focus on, saying: "The purpose of science in primary schools should be to foster a sense of curiosity and positive attitudes in the young child. It should also guide the child in solving problems to do with the physical, natural and human worlds."
